He managed to focus and continue the fight, eventually earning a great victory.

3-Read the following text, then answer the questions:

During the Middle Ages, sports were often violent, but today the Olympic Games celebrate a different spirit. Every four years, athletes from different cultures come together to compete. While winning is a goal, the most important value is fair play.

In a recent race, a runner noticed that his opponent (and main rival) had fallen and was injured. He had a great chance to win, but he made a quick decision. Instead of continuing his attack for the finish line, he stopped to help his friend. He didn't earn a gold medal that day, but his honesty and kindness inspired many generations to come. It was a powerful reminder that being a good person is more important than any physical advantage.
