Related courses and careers	Do you aspire a career in Engineering / Banking / Science / Arts / History / Music / International Business.... to name a few? Over the past centuries, the German language has been at the forefront of some of the most creative minds and greatest thinkers in the world, such as Copernicus, Benz, Beethoven, Mozart, Schweitzer and Einstein. German is the second most important language in the field of science and due to its continuous success on the global market, Germany is also the world’s largest exporter of goods, including vehicles (VW, Porsche), chemical products, chocolate and computers to name a few. Therefore, speaking German will be the spark that helps you take

	the next steps to becoming a market leader in whatever field you choose. Studying German at A-Level will not only improve your reading, listening and speaking ability, but it will provide you with knowledge of Germany's rich culture, both historically and contemporary. Many British and American companies conduct business in German-speaking countries. Interestingly, Germany is the sixth largest exporter of American-made products. If you plan to have a career with an international company, then your A-Level German qualification could come in useful. Being able to speak German has its obvious advantages, but there are many other academic benefits in being able to speak the tenth most widely spoken language in the world. If you have an interest in studying music, philosophy, religion, medicine, law or physics at university level, then having a base knowledge of the German language will enhance your enjoyment, given its rich culture and history in these subjects. German is also the second most commonly used language on the internet.
